Certificate of Reconciliation Studies

What is CRS?

Beginning in January 2017 - First Nations University of Canada's Reconciliation Studies (CRS) will be available online to serve a national audience. First Nations University of Canada proposed the creation of an 18-credit (6 course) Certificate of Reconciliation Studies (CRS). Following the Calls to Action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the CRS program focuses on recognizing the shared history of Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples and the need to promote healing, equity and respect for /of Indigenous cultures and values in Canadian Society. The course will be delivered in person at one of the three First Nations University of Canada Campuses as well as through online delivery to increase the availability of the program across Canada.

Who would benefit from the program?

The CRS is intended to benefit non-degree seeking individuals who may apply this certificate for career advancement, as well as students enrolled in degree programs in Social Work, Education and Health offered at the First Nations University of Canada.
